Henry had married Sarah O'Neill in St Michaels church Philadelphia 21st Oct 1847. Married by the Rev William Loughran and document later countersigned by the Rev Thomas Kiernon. In early 1862 Henry ended up in hospital at Camp Observation Md. with fatal lung and chest problems and Surgeon Bierwith left a note for the 71st Reg medical staff on 25 Feb 1862 basically informing them that Henry was dieing. He did die on 2nd March 1862. In his papers he referred to himself as a carpet weaver.. Not on muster out roll. Probably a brother to Edward McCann Co. B. (above) Interesting he referred to himself as a weaver a trade he could well have learnt back in Ireland especially along the shores of Lough Neagh close to Magherafelt Co. Derry an area well known for linen weaving in the 19th century.

up his life as a pauper living in the Blockley Alms House. In normal circumstances when he died he would be buried in its associated cemetery. However when he did die and his sister went to claim his body she was told the corpse was missing. It was obviously sold on or corpse passed on to corpse traders supplying corpses to hospitals for teaching purposes. Like Capt Charles McAnally his remains probably ended up as dissected body parts strewn in many places. A shocking end for a good man who probably gave compassionate ambulance service at Gettysburg. Said to have been a weaver by trade.

Sadly the Greenwood cemetery became extinct and the transfer of all the identifiable remains was never completed and later what remained of the cemetery was tarred over and lost to history. Some remains were apparently removed to the Citizens Cemetery. The cemetery now in the Thorp Park area of the city of Falstaff and remainder of cemetery in area of the tennis courts!. Also he apparently spent some two years in St Louis Missouri where he had an uncle Edward A Noonan held many high positions in the city and was at a time a judge in the St Louis Court of Correction. His uncle being born in Pa. This uncle buried in the Cavalry Cemetery St Louis Ms.
